CASE 3F: Reincarnation - After Life

Possible Evidence for the
soul?

1996: Taranjit Singh was born to a poor peasant family in India and received no education. His parents claim he had been talking about his past life since he was two years old and used to run away from home.

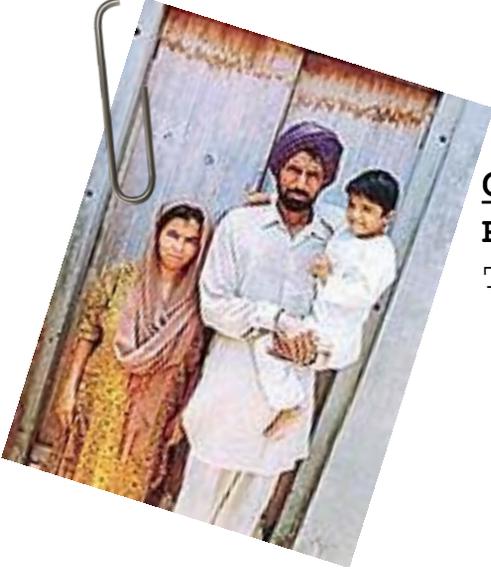

The boy knew the village he lived in during his former life, as well as his own and his father's names. He also knew the name of the school he attended.

On 10 September 1992, in his previous life, he says he was riding his bike home when he was hit by a motor scooter. He received head injuries and died the next day.

His present father, Ranjit Singh, says that as the boy became more and more insistent, he and his wife went to the village where Taranjit claimed to have lived in the past. At first, they couldn't find anyone who resembled the descriptions of his former parents. Then someone told him to go to another nearby village, where they met a teacher at the local school who confirmed the story of the motor scooter accident. They found out where the boy had lived and went there to meet the parents.

When they told the family their story, Ranjit Singh mentioned that his son claimed the books he was carrying when the accident occurred had got blood on them. He also described how much money he had in his wallet. When the woman heard this, she began to cry and said she had saved the blood-stained books and the money in memory of her dead child. Taranjit Singh's parents and siblings from his former life soon came to his new home to meet him. The boy recognized a wedding picture his former parents brought with them.

At first Indian forensic scientist Vikram Raj Singh Chauhan, refused to believe this story, but he eventually became curious and decided to investigate. He visited both villages and found that the boy and both sets of parents repeated the same story. Chauhan spoke to a shopkeeper who told him that the boy had owed him the money that was in his wallet when he was hit, and was probably bringing it to him to pay for a notebook he had got on credit.

----- Continued -----

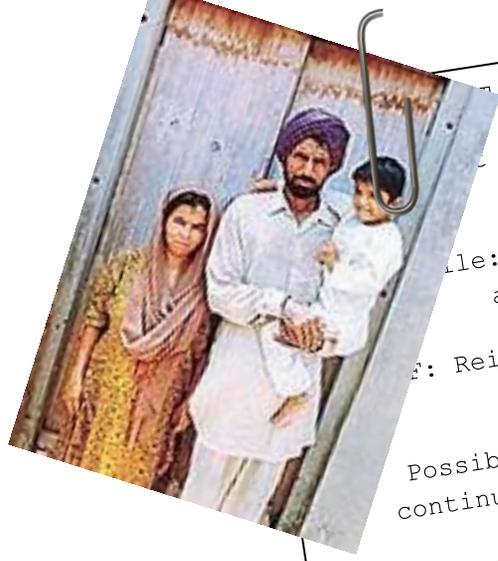

"In his present birth, Taranjit has never gone to school as he belongs to a poor family, but yet when I told him to write the English and Punjabi alphabet, he wrote them correctly," Chauhan said. He took samples of both boys' handwriting and compared them. He found they were identical. It is a basic tenet of forensic science that no two handwriting styles can be identical, because each person's handwriting has specific characteristics. Experts can usually spot even expertly forged handwriting.

NOTE: If this is true then it would be evidence for reincarnation and also life after death.

Questions: How far should this evidence be taken as truth? Can you provide any other explanations? Does this prove the existence of an after-life?

----- In only 11 of the estimated 1,111 rebirth cases had there been no contact between the two families before an investigation was begun. Of these, 7 were seriously flawed in some respect [...] The rebirth cases are anecdotal [own story] evidence of the weakest sort

CASE FILE 3F: Exhibit 3B - Religion

Both Hinduism and Buddhism have taught that after death the human soul is not extinguished, but like a flame, transfers to a new candle, the soul is transferred to a new body. However, only in Hinduism would it be possible for someone to remember their previous life. If they remember their previous incarnation, it would be for a reason, perhaps unfinished business or a wrong that must be righted.

Under hypnosis, some people have spoken of past memories of past lives, some of these have been verified to be highly accurate in detail, some of these are not verifiable at all.
